the people who go to work and have had some financial obligations, paying their taxes, their child support, their spousal support, and having a little bit to start out with, I have seen very few of them return. Got a young man I'm working with right now who got out of the Omaha Correctional Center, release...work release, it's called CCCL, Community Correction Center, Omaha, not CCCL, that's CCCO, Omaha, two months back, and the last few months in this correctional center he went out during the day and he worked at Eppley Airfield putting the food and drink on the airplanes. He's now making 8.50 an hour. How many of you in here are making that much for your work today? He's being responsible, he's putting money aside for a baby that's coming shortly, he's doing well. And I know that's only one example, but there's many. I have not talked to a group of people in the last four years about anything like this who did not agree with me. It sounds like you're on to something. What makes us good citizens? What makes us part of this country? The first thing we learn is some morals and values, and part of them values is work values, we learn a work ethic when you get a check in your hand and you pay taxes and you're part of this country. I'm a member. That's all I'm asking. These numbers are deceiving as you count them up. But if there is actually only 14 percent, I'll say go 50 percent are violent, and then go down and leave 30 percent in between, and grab that 20 percent on the other end and let's put them in these work release centers. And there's a difference between community corrections and work release. I know there's somewhat work release in the community... The community corrections is that probation, parole type thing, intensive probation. This is work release. They come back to the facility at nights and on weekends and they stay there. And if they're making money, they can take a class, like the rest of us would who want to have to go to college or school when we're working, we take a class at night. We have a teacher come out there, offer a class, or on weekends. But it's putting them to work. Not a bunch of fancy counseling programs, because I am a counselor. Sometimes I wonder what a counselor is, ever being one. A lot of people think, that come in, sit down in front of you, that you're going
